Mayor Laura Miller Is A Cover Girl!

Mayor's Fight To Beat Cancer Featured As Cover Story In Premier Issue of New Breast Cancer Magazine

DALLAS- Mayor Laura Miller has been cancer-free for eight years. Her very public fight with the disease is familiar to many in Dallas, but now her story will be told to a nationwide audience.

Beyond: Live & Thrive After Breast Cancer, published by Meredith Special Interest Media, provides women who have or had breast cancer the support and latest information on treatment and recovery. The premiere issue, set to hit newsstands next week, features a profile of Mayor Miller and her story of survival.

Mayor Miller says eight years later, it is still important for her to share her story. "From the time I was diagnosed in 1998, I have always thought there was a real value in being very open about your illness and showing other people what you're going through."

"I know people are curious about what happens with chemo and radiation treatments, and I hope by sharing my story I can help other women know what to expect," Miller continued.

The premiere issue also provides honest, heartwarming profiles, inspiring stories and practical advice. Beyond: Live & Thrive After Breast Cancer will hit newsstands on September 19 (cover story on page 54). Information on the new magazine and its first issue is also featured in the 'Healthy Family' section of the October 2006 issue of Better Homes and Gardens (page 264).

More than two million American women live with breast cancer. Beyond is written to provide this community a resource of support, inspiration and knowledge.
